Join the International Economic Relations MA program with special focus on responses to Global Change and the Crisis of Democracy

Dysfunctions associated with economic and political globalization, the gathering storm of environmental crises, and the changes wrought by the new information technologies, demand that educational institutions prepare students for what will undoubtedly be a tempestuous future. Unfortunately, the educational programs offered by many institutions lack a genuinely future-oriented perspective that is focused clearly on the new “Age of Crises.”

Programs at ISES are designed to break through the political, economic, and social illusions that are rooted in the past, to prepare students with the critical intellectual tools and analyses that will help them to negotiate the confusing and disorienting social world of the first half of the 21st century.
